goes west to Five-Mile Pass where the paved highway is left behind in crossing Rush Valley to East Rush Valley Station. Daughters of Utah Pioneers have marked this site with a plaque.

RUSH VALLEY

The little Tooele town of Faust, commemorates H. J. (Doc) Faust, an occasional "Pony" rider, who operated the next station on the stop — Rush Valley Station.

An elaborate stone-walled "dog" cemetery is an attraction at Lookout Pass. Four favored dogs — whose names have been preserved — are interred there, along with three travelers whose names are unknown. The station was manned by Horace Rockwell and his wife, Libby.

OTHER STOPS

Remnants of Simpson Springs, the next stop, still exist. Water from the spring supplied other stops.

Riverbed Station site is at the foot of Table Mountain.

From Dugway Station, the next stop, also marked by a monument, the trail leads northward to a black volcanic knoll which was the site of Blackrock Station.

Between here and the Nevada border are the remaining six stops — Fish Springs, Boyd, Willow Springs, Round, Burnout and Deep Creek.

Burnout Station came by its name justly, after being destroyed several times by Indians. Gun ports are still intact in the ruins of Boyd Station near Callao.

Deep Creek Station, the last out of Utah, as one of the larger stations and some buildings are still intact, including a store opened by PE rider Howard Egan.
